FAA 12-Year Forecast Cautiously Optimistic

by Barbara Cima Nemeth

The Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) released its 12-year forecast this month for fiscal years 2005 through 2016. What's their bottom-line prognosis? "We expect aviation activity to escalate during the forecasted period, with passenger totals exceeding one billion by 2015. In the near-term, however, growth is tempered by significant challenges, most notably the impact of high fuel prices on the industry's worsening financial state. But as history has amply demonstrated, aviation is resilient," says Marion C. Blakey, FAA Aerospace Administrator. And there's more good news on the forefront: passenger traffic will return to its pre-9/11 levels this year. The FAA incorporated many factors to reach these conclusions: World and U.S. economic activity and world travel demands, gross national product trends, and general aviation needs.

Let's start with the past year. In 2004 the major airlines appeared to be the most vulnerable and suffered the deepest wounds. Three carriers—ATA, United Airlines, and US Airways—are currently under bankruptcy protection, and Delta Air Lines is threatening to follow suit if deeper concessions are not reached soon. The regional and low-cost carriers produced a more positive spin. Enplanements are up 40 percent since 2000 and the two combined groups covet a 43-percent share of the passenger market. Overall, U.S. airlines on the whole fared well. Available seats per mile grew by 8.4 percent, revenue passenger miles increased 10.6 percent, and enplanements rose 8.1 percent, all of which exceeded their pre-9/11/01 levels.

That was the past. What about the future? In order to fully understand where the brunt of future activity will occur, it is important to understand the two notable factors currently driving the market in the direction it is headed: major restructuring with downsizing among the legacy* carriers and rapid growth among the low-cost and regional carriers.

In the coming years, domestic traffic growth among the mainline carriers will slow significantly in 2005, rebound in 2006, and return to modest growth rates for the remaining years. Comparing the year 2004 with the year 2016, enplanements will increase system-wide from 559.5 in 2004 to 803 million. RPMs will rise from 664.3 billion last year to 1,073.3 trillion. ASMs from 875.5 billion last year to 1,395.9 trillion. Passenger aircraft will increase from 4,046 last year to 5,999 and the cargo carriers fleet size will increase from 974 to 1,312.

Passenger volume within the ranks of regional and commuter airlines, listed by the FAA as carriers flying aircraft having 90 seats or less, will produce the highest growth rates. System-wide enplanements will rise from 128.9 million in 2004 to 245.5 million by 2016, an annual growth rate of 5.5 percent. RPMs will rise from 53.1 billion to 121.4 billion. ASMs will go up from 78.1 billion to a staggering 170.2 billion. The fleet that was composed primarily of piston and turboprop aircraft, will slowly be phased out and replaced with larger regional jet aircraft in the future. 50-seat aircraft, once the pack-mule of this groups aircraft base, will slowly be replaced by the larger 70 to 90 seaters, and the total number of aircraft within this division will increase from 2,812 in 2004 to 3,961 over the next 12 years. The primary role of this carrier group will remain the same, that of a feeder system for the legacy and low-cost major airlines.

Combining all airline groups, the FAA is forecasting that ASMs will increase from 953.6 in 2004 to 1.6 trillion by the year 2016, enplanements will rise from 688.5 million last year to over 1 billion, and load factors will grow from 75.2 percent to 76.3 percent.

Though the FAA forecast is a reliable gauge for career planning purposes, you must keep in mind that the aviation industry is vulnerable to forces beyond its control, as exhibited most recently by the hard-hit impact of the SARS epidemic, the Iraqi war, and the continued escalation of jet fuel prices. Yet, for now, the future has more of a silver lining shrouding it than a dark cloud hanging over it. "In the long run," concludes Blakey, "inexpensive tickets, a strong national economy, and increasing demand for seats aboard aircraft should bode well for the industry and consumers."

*Legacy carriers: Alaska, American, Continental, Delta, Northwest, United, and US Airways. ✈
